*If your spring and summer plans include cleaning out attics, basements, closets and other storage spaces, be sure to think twice about anything you want to toss out, put in a yard sale or donate for resale. You may have items we can add to the Archives collections. Items do not have to be very old to be of interest to us—some of these materials may be important to future historians documenting the past then that is our present now. Possible donations include books and pamphlets, West Virginia magazines and newspapers, city directories and telephone books, maps, postcards, letters, photographs, etc. Fiction books by West Virginia authors or with West Virginia as a predominant theme will be considered. However, please do not send us items without checking with us first by e-mail, mail or telephone. My contact info and our mailing address appear on the last page of every issue.*

13th Annual Hoot Owl Night a Success

The West Virginia Archives and History Library held its 13th annual Hoot Owl night of research in the Archives library on March 30-31, 2012. Thirty-five people attended the all-night event, which ran from 6:00 p.m. on Friday, March 30, through 8:00 a.m. on Saturday, March 31. Attendees were given behind-the-scenes tours of the Archives and were able to consult with experienced and knowledgeable West Virginia researchers. Hoot Owl is co-sponsored by the Mining Your History Foundation and Archives and History as a fundraiser for the Archives library.

The Building of the N&W Railroad To Be Discussed on May 1

On May 1, 2012, Jack and Kay Dickinson will present “Every Blood-Stained Mile: The Building of the Norfolk and Western in West Virginia” at the Tuesday evening lecture in the Archives and History Library. The program will begin at 6:00 p.m. and is free and open to the public.

Almost as soon as the Norfolk & Western Railroad edged its way across the Virginia state line into Bluefield, N&W President Fred Kimball began to look for a midwestern outlet to expand his markets. He decided to extend his railroad to the Ohio River near Ceredo, where he could link up with another railroad from which Cincinnati and Columbus could be reached. The Ohio Extension, as the additional N&W road was called, ran from Elkhorn (near Bluefield) to the Ohio, cutting through part of McDowell County, north into Logan County (the part that is now Mingo County) and through Wayne County to the river.

This was rugged territory, and law enforcement was almost non-existent. When the railroad began construction, different ethnic groups often clashed resulting in several deaths. By September 1892 when the track was opened, the Ohio Extension had cost $8 million, almost bankrupting the N&W. But the railroad brought a new era to that part of western West Virginia. Towns sprang up, centered around the railroad station, and towns like Williamson, Kenova, Welch, and Naugatuck took hold and still exist. After Kimball realized he had made a mistake in choosing the original path along Twelvepole Creek, the N&W built the Big Sandy Line, which follows the western border of West Virginia along the Big Sandy River. Today this is the route of Norfolk Southern through West Virginia.

Ancestry.com is offering a RootsWeb listserv for K-12 teachers to share ideas and experiences in teaching genealogy and/or using original documents in the classroom: http://lists.rootsweb.ancestry.com/index/other/Genealogical_Materials/GENEALOGY-IN-SCHOOLS.html. The list is non-commercial with no advertising except once quarterly announcements of available services and publications, as is typical of many listservs. Ancestry.com membership is not necessary to join or browse the list. Please note that the list and its posts are not of benefit or suitable for personal genealogical research, nor as a resource for student research on genealogy or history projects.

Jack and Kay Dickinson will present the difficulties and problems encountered in building these two lines of the N&W, as well as how the towns sprang up along the tracks. They also will point out some of the little-known sources they utilized in a decade-long writing effort that has produced a four-volume set of books that cover the construction of the railroad, the growth of the area, the group of men who were the special agents (railroad detectives) to provide security for the railroad and its passengers, the stories of the bizarre train wrecks along the line, and some of the amazing survivor stories. The books will be available for purchase following the session.

Husband and wife authors Jack and Kay Dickinson have spent more than forty years researching the history and genealogy of the people and places of southern West Virginia. For a decade, they did research as certified genealogists. Jack Dickinson also is the author of a dozen books on the Civil War in West Virginia, for which Kay Dickinson served as research assistant and editor. They grew up in Mingo and Wayne counties and have an avid interest in the history of that area. The couple is nearing completion of the fifth and final book in the series on southern West Virginia and the N&W. They also recently authored and published a biography of Gen. Albert Gallatin Jenkins, CSA, which includes the history of his Greenbottom plantation.

On May 1, the library will close at 5:00 p.m. and reopen at

African Americans and the C&O Railroad To Be May 17 Program Topic

On May 17, 2012, Dr. Cicero M. Fain will present "Into the Crucible: The Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad and the Black Industrial Worker in Southern West Virginia, 1870-1900" at the Thursday evening lecture in the Archives and History Library in the Culture Center in Charleston. The program will begin at 6:00 p.m. and is free and open to the public.

Fain will discuss the construction of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad, which brought rail transportation to south-central West Virginia in the post-Civil War era. The C&O, which Fain considers "the second most important development in the history of the state," led to the founding of Huntington as the railroad's western terminus in 1870 and brought development of southern coalfields. The topics he will cover include the contribution of black labor to its construction, the rise of Huntington as an urban-industrial center, and the linkage of the New River Valley and the city to the regional and national economy.

Cicero M. Fain III is a third-generation black Huntingtonian. He is a recipient of the Carter G. Woodson Fellowship from Marshall University and a graduate of The Ohio State University, where he received his PhD in History, with an emphasis in African American, American, and modern-African history. His dissertation, titled, "Race, River and the Railroad: Black Huntington, West Virginia, 1871-1929," focuses on the transition of southern rural and semi-rural black migrants to life in the embryonic urban-industrial city of Huntington, West Virginia, between 1871 and 1929. Fain is assistant professor of history at the College of Southern Maryland. He is the author of articles in the Journal of Appalachian Studies, Ohio Valley History, and West Virginia History: A Journal of Regional Studies.

Advance registration for the program is not required but is encouraged to help plan seating arrangements. To register in
